The global Monochrome Laser Single-Function Printer market size is predicted to grow from US$ 2168 million in 2025 to US$ 2743 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 3.5% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2024, global production of monochrome laser single-function printers reached 17.1035 million units, with an average selling price of US$127 per unit. The annual production capacity of a single-line monochrome laser single-function printer is approximately [unclear context - possibly a mistranslation of the original text and image], with a gross profit margin of approximately 32.5%. A monochrome laser single-function printer is a laser printer that only prints black and white text/graphics and typically lacks multi-function (MFP) functions such as scanning, copying, and faxing. It uses laser imaging technology to form a latent image on a photosensitive drum, which is then transferred to paper through a developer and toner, and finally fixed through a fusing process to form the printed image. Compared to color laser printers and MFPs, monochrome laser single-function printers are generally cheaper, have higher print speeds, lower unit costs, take up less space, and are easier to operate. The upstream raw materials for monochrome laser single-function printers include basic materials and components. Laser and optical components include laser diodes/laser modules, optical lenses, reflectors, and optical path adjustment elements. Body and structural materials include metal casings, aluminum extrusions, chassis components, shock absorbers, bolts, and seals. Imaging and sensing components: Photoelectric sensors, cameras, and CMOS/CCD components for alignment and quality inspection. Midstream includes manufacturers of single-function black and white laser printers, while downstream includes home and commercial printers.
