A mortgage lender will then use a mortgage as security for the lending of money. A mortgage lender may also be a lender to owners of real estate, but not necessarily for its purchase. In this case they may be loaning money to a borrower for other purposes, but will still take a mortgage as security for the money loaned.

The mortgage lender is the entity that actually provides the funds to the buyer and will retain the mortgage on the property. After the mortgage is secured, the lender may sell the mortgage loan to another entity who would then become the mortgage holder.
