Mutual funds are also known as variable share investment companies. An investment trust fund organization that provides investment for small property owners and distributes stocks that can be converted into cash at any time. In Western countries, due to the developed securities markets and serious speculation, people cannot decide which stocks to buy or when to buy and sell them. Some people with experience in securities business start from the pursuit of income, capital appreciation, or even speculation, organize 'mutual funds', raise funds on their own, and pool investors' funds to purchase a variety of securities, while providing investors with options Alternative purchase plans, from which commissions are collected. Investors can also exchange investment types for some fees as needed. The price at which it sells shares is not directly affected by the market, and is only determined by the price of securities held by mutual funds.
