Nicergoline is a potent vasodilator that helps improve brain blood flow by decreases vascular resistance and improving the utilization of glucose and oxygen by brain cells.

The global nicergoline market is projected to grow steadily. The rising burden of vascular disorders worldwide will drive the demand for Nicergoline. Rising incidences of complications due to vascular disorders are anticipated to drive the demand for Nicergoline. Increasing prevalence of cerebral thrombosis, Raynaud's disease, vascular migraines, atherosclerosis, arterial blockages in the limbs, and retinopathy are projected to raise volume calls for Nicergoline. Growing FDA approval for new disease treatments is foreseen to create new growth opportunities. However, the availability of other substitutes in the market is likely to restrain the market growth. Specific challenges are roaming around the market. Adverse events have been noted associated with allergic or hypersensitivity-type reactions after the Nicergoline injection into the body.
