Nickel silver, a range of alloys of copper, nickel, and zinc which are silvery in appearance but contain no silver. Its composition varies from 7 to 30 percent nickel, the alloy most widely used being 18 percent nickel silver (18 percent nickel, 62 percent copper, 20 percent zinc). In general the zinc content is lowered as the nickel is increased, the copper content varying between 53 and 63 percent. Sterling silver, in contrast, is an alloy in which pure silver makes up at least 92.5 percent of the content. The importance of these alloys lies in their colour, ductility, good mechanical properties, and suitability for working in a wide variety of cast, rolled and extruded, or drawn shapes. The addition of 1–2 percent lead improves machining properties. Such alloys resist corrosion better than does brass but tarnish slowly through the action of sulfur in the air. Their colour ranges from nearly white in the 30 percent alloy to pale brassy yellow in the alloys with low nickel content.

The global Nickel Silver Products market size is projected to grow from US$ 4460.8 million in 2023 to US$ 5847.3 million in 2030; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 3.9% from 2024 to 2030.
