Nickel metal can be plated on a variety of metal substrates using many different chemical formulations. At some point, it may be necessary to remove the plating without corroding or degrading the metal substrate. When choosing a chemical stripper, it is important to understand the metal alloy and the type of nickel to be stripped. Nickel strippers are used to remove all types of nickel deposits from steel, stainless steel, copper, brass and zinc die castings. Nickel strippers are available in powder and liquid form. It's stable, fast and easy to control.
