Non-Networked Sound Masking Equipment typically consist of speakers or emitters strategically placed throughout a space, such as an office, hospital, or open-plan area. The speakers emit low-level, broadband noise that is specifically engineered to match the frequency spectrum of human speech, making conversations less intelligible and reducing distractions. Non-networked sound masking systems are relatively easy to install and manage, as they do not require complex networking or integration with other building systems. They often have simple controls, allowing the adjustment of volume or masking level to suit the specific needs of the space. These systems can be beneficial in environments where speech privacy is crucial, such as offices, conference rooms, medical facilities, or call centers. They can also help improve concentration, reduce stress, and increase productivity in open-plan offices or shared workspaces.
