Nondestructive Testing Services has the following characteristics. The first is non-destructive, because it will not damage the performance of the test object when it is tested; the second is comprehensive, because the test is non-destructive, so 100% of the test object can be fully tested when necessary. This is not possible with destructive testing; the third is full-scale. Destructive testing is generally only applicable to the detection of raw materials. For finished products and in-use supplies, unless they are not ready to continue service, they cannot be destructive. The performance of the test, and nondestructive testing does not damage the detected object.
