On-voyage Ship Repair Services refer to professional technical support and maintenance services provided for ships (including cargo ships, passenger ships, tankers, offshore support vessels, etc.) during their navigation, berthing at non-home ports, or temporary anchoring, without the need for the ship to enter a fixed shipyard dry dock. These services cover emergency and routine maintenance of key ship systems and components, such as engine and propulsion system repairs, navigation and communication equipment troubleshooting, hull structure patching, pipeline leakage repair, electrical system maintenance, and marine equipment (e.g., cranes, pumps) performance restoration. Delivered by mobile technical teams or specialized on-voyage repair vessels, the services feature rapid response, on-site operation, and minimal disruption to the ship's voyage schedule—equipped with portable tools, spare parts, and marine-grade repair materials to adapt to complex maritime environments. They aim to address sudden failures, prevent potential safety hazards, maintain the ship's seaworthiness and operational efficiency, ensure compliance with international maritime regulations (such as SOLAS and MARPOL), and avoid costly voyage delays or forced port calls for repairs.
