An Outrigger Canoe is a type of boat characterized by a long, narrow hull and outrigger, which is a float attached to one or both sides of the main body of the canoe for increased stability. Unlike typical one-person canoes, outhouses are designed for sea activities and can accommodate up to six people. Because of its enormous size and weight, and the need for a sizable group to paddle, Outrigger Canoe is often considered a club sport. For ancient communities, outhouses were an important means of transportation and fishing across the Pacific and Indian Oceans. In contemporary times, the sport has developed into a spiritual activity that emphasizes trust in peers, reliance on the forces of nature, and a deep respect for nature, all without any mechanical push.
