Overhead Garage Doors are large doors typically installed at the entry points of residential or commercial garages. These doors are designed to provide access to the garage space for vehicles, storage, or other purposes while also offering security, insulation, and protection from the elements.

Overhead Garage Doors are typically constructed with multiple horizontal panels, which are hinged together to allow the door to bend as it opens and closes. These panels are usually made of materials such as steel, aluminum, wood, or fiberglass. Overhead garage doors can be operated manually or automatically. Manual operation involves lifting and lowering the door using handles or pull ropes. Automatic operation is facilitated by an electric garage door opener, which is mounted on the ceiling of the garage and controlled by a remote or wall-mounted switch.
