Packed Column Wet Scrubbers are air pollution control devices that use a column filled with packing material to facilitate the contact between a contaminated gas stream and a liquid scrubbing solution. The gas flows through the packed column, where it encounters the liquid, which absorbs or reacts with the pollutants. This process effectively removes contaminants, such as acids, volatile organic compounds, and particulate matter, from the gas stream before it is released into the atmosphere. The packed column design enhances the surface area for gas-liquid interaction, improving the efficiency of the scrubbing process.
