Paper-Based Barrier Packaging refers to packaging products primarily made from paper or paperboard and engineered with barrier properties against moisture, oxygen, grease, aroma, light, or other external factors. Barrier performance is typically achieved through coatings, laminations, dispersion layers, mineral or polymer-based treatments, or other functional surface structures while maintaining the paper-based substrate as the main packaging material. Products include barrier paper, coated paperboard, paper pouches, wraps, trays, and other formed packaging formats. They are mainly used for food, beverages, household products, personal care, and selected industrial packaging applications where product protection and reduced plastic content are required.

The upstream industry supplies paper and paperboard substrates, functional coatings, water-based barrier materials, polymers, mineral fillers, adhesives, inks, and packaging auxiliaries. The midstream industry performs coating, extrusion or dispersion application, laminating, drying, printing, converting, cutting, forming, and sealing to
