The global Peer Review System market size is predicted to grow from US$ 851 million in 2025 to US$ 1273 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.0% from 2026 to 2032.

To address the issues of relying on individual judgment for academic quality control, inefficient review processes, and difficulties in maintaining academic integrity, peer review systems emerged. Since their inception in the mid-17th century with the institutionalization of academic journals and their emergence as the cornerstone of modern academic publishing in the mid-20th century, peer review systems have significantly promoted the standardization and credibility of academic exchange. Currently, peer review systems have evolved into professional processes encompassing single-blind, double-blind, and open review models, deeply integrated into digital submission and editing platforms. They are widely used in academic journals, conference papers, and research grant reviews, effectively ensuring the quality, originality, and ethical standards of academic achievements through collective wisdom and institutional verification, becoming a core mechanism for maintaining the order of disciplinary development and the credibility of knowledge.

With the maturation of AI, blockchain, and 5G/6G technologies, peer review systems will evolve towards "ultra-intelligent, decentralized, and open ecosystems." AI will participate more deeply in review decisions, blockchain will ensure transparency and traceability, and cross-platform data platforms will integrate resources. Enterprises need to focus on breakthroughs in core technologies (such as domain-adaptive AI models), ecosystem collaboration (cross-institutional data sharing), and sustainable models (green review and circular economy) to reconstruct a new paradigm of "quality-efficiency-credibility" in the wave of digital scientific research. For example, by automatically identifying review biases through AI and combining this with blockchain to achieve full-process verifiability, a transformation from "centralized closed review" to "open collaborative consensus" can be promoted, building a fairer, more transparent, and more efficient knowledge assessment system.
