A pet healthcare platform is a comprehensive system platform that utilizes internet technology, mobile applications, and smart devices to provide pets and their owners with integrated online and offline medical and health management services. This platform typically integrates functions such as online consultations, health record management, remote video consultations, appointment booking, offline consultation collaboration, vaccination and check-up reminders, prescription issuance, and delivery of medicines and pet supplies, providing full-lifecycle health management services for pets. Through digitalization and intelligentization, pet healthcare platforms improve the efficiency and accessibility of pet medical services, promoting the rational allocation of veterinary resources and the standardization of the industry.

The downstream of pet healthcare platforms mainly includes pet hospitals, veterinary clinics, pet medicine and nutrition companies, pet insurance companies, and pet supply retail channels. By connecting pet owners with various medical and health service resources, the platform promotes the digitalization of online consultations, offline consultation collaboration, pet health record management, and vaccination and check-up services. Downstream clients typically include individual pet owners, chain pet hospitals, and third-party testing institutions, forming a multi-layered ecological partnership. With the upgrading of pet consumption and the enhancement of health awareness, the profit model of pet healthcare platforms is diversified (such as SaaS subscriptions, transaction commissions, drug sales, and advertising). The industry as a whole has a relatively high gross profit margin, generally around 56%.
