Pet therapy platforms are online platforms that combine digital tools with professional pet therapy services to provide users with emotional companionship, stress relief, and psychological rehabilitation support. They typically integrate pet interactive content (such as virtual pet interaction and AI pet companionship), pet therapy courses, professional psychological counseling services, community interaction, and connections to offline pet therapy activities. Through visual interaction and immersive experiences, they provide users with continuous, convenient, and accessible emotional therapy support.

The downstream clients of pet therapy platforms mainly include mental health service institutions, online emotion management platforms, physical pet stores and pet therapy centers, pet industry content platforms, corporate employee care systems, and emotion service channels targeting specific groups such as the elderly and students.

Downstream clients have high requirements for content operation quality, interactive experience, and sustained activity levels, and their overall payment ability is stable. The gross profit margin of pet therapy platforms is approximately 52%.

Pet healing platforms are changing the traditional way of pet care, allowing pet owners to manage their pets' health and happiness more conveniently through digital and personalized services. This platform not only improves the quality of life of pets, but also strengthens the emotional bond between owners and pets, conforming to the high demand and high standards for pet care in modern society. With the advancement of technology and the continuous development of the pet economy, pet healing platforms will become an important trend in the field of pet care, driving the industry towards a more intelligent and integrated direction.
