The global Pick and Carry Crane market size is predicted to grow from US$ 528 million in 2025 to US$ 686 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 3.7% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2025, global Pick and Carry Crane production reached approximately 3,000 units?with an average global market price of around US$ 180,000 per unit, and a gross profit margin of approximately 20%-40%. A pick and carry crane is a self-propelled mobile crane designed to lift a load (“pick”) and transport it over short distances within the same worksite (“carry”) without needing a separate transport vehicle. Unlike larger truck cranes that typically rely on outriggers and extensive setup, pick-and-carry units emphasize fast repositioning, tight turning radii, and frequent moves between lift points. Core subsystems include a telescopic or lattice boom, hydraulic winch, multi-mode steering (e.g., front/rear/all-wheel), onboard power (diesel, battery-electric, or hybrid), and safety systems such as load moment limiting and anti-two-block.

The pick and carry crane market is shaped by two demand centers with different buying logic. In South Asia—especially India—high-volume demand is driven by infrastructure and general construction where “Hydra” pick-and-carry cranes have become the default mobile crane format in the lower-to-mid capacity band, supported by dense dealer networks, price-sensitive purchasing, and a large rental ecosystem. Outside this high-volume hub, Europe and North America are more fragmented and skew toward industrial self-propelled and carry-deck cranes used for plant maintenance, machinery positioning, shutdown work, and confined-area handling, where electric drives and zero-emission operation are increasingly valued. European specialists market battery-electric pick-and-carry platforms explicitly for indoor and industrial environments, while major global crane groups compete in carry-deck formats that overlap procurement comparisons with pick-and-carry solutions.
