In a strict sense, plastic clothing refers to garments constructed from flexible, non-woven synthetic sheets rather than spun fibers. These pieces are characterized by their distinct 'plastic' appearance—often glossy, waterproof, and impermeable. Unlike common polyester shirts which are woven to feel like natural fabric, narrow-definition plastic clothing typically utilizes materials like Polyvinyl Chloride (PVC), Polyurethane (PU), or TPU (Thermoplastic Polyurethane) in their raw film form. This category is predominantly found in specialized functional gear (such as heavy-duty raincoats and hazmat suits), fetish or avant-garde high fashion, and the 'futuristic' vinyl aesthetics of the 1960s Space Age.

In 2025, global plastic clothing market size reached approximately 500 million USD, gross margin 30%.

United States market for Plastic Clothing is estimated to increase from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million by 2032, at a CAGR of % from 2026 through 2032.
