The global Polished Quartz Sheet market size is predicted to grow from US$ 144 million in 2025 to US$ 221 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.5% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2025, the production volume of polished quartz wafers is projected to reach 451,800 units, with an average selling price of $325 per unit. The global annual production capacity for polished quartz wafers stands at approximately 600,000 units, accompanied by a gross margin of approximately 25.2%. Quartz wafers demonstrate exceptional performance in terms of both optical properties and mechanical strength; furthermore, the polishing process endows their surfaces with extremely low roughness and high flatness, thereby ensuring superior light transmission and imaging quality. The upstream raw materials for polished quartz wafers include high-purity quartz sand, polishing fluids, and polishing pads, among others. The midstream segment consists of polished quartz wafer manufacturers, while the downstream market is primarily concentrated in industries such as semiconductors and optics.

On the demand side, high-tech sectors?such as semiconductors and optics?continue to exhibit growing demand for high-precision polished quartz wafers. This trend is driven particularly by advancements in semiconductor chip manufacturing processes, which necessitate quartz wafers of exceptional purity and flatness; additionally, applications involving high-end instrumentation and laser systems within the optics sector have further expanded the market's scope. On the supply side, the global market is dominated by internationally renowned brands (such as Shin-Etsu MicroSi and Tosoh Quartz). Meanwhile, domestic Chinese enterprises (such as Filihua and Sanda Optics) are gradually securing a market share through technological upgrades and capacity expansion, though the sector as a whole continues to face competitive pressure from international technologies. The industry is currently in a phase of steady growth, where technological innovation and product quality improvements serve as the key determinants of competitiveness; concurrently, factors such as the stability of raw material supplies, technological barriers, and the international trade environment exert a significant influence on market development.
