The global Pre-employment Physical Examination Service market size is predicted to grow from US$ 28522 million in 2025 to US$ 3397272828007856 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 31333.8% from 2026 to 2032.

Pre-employment medical examinations refer to comprehensive health checkups provided by employers or professional medical institutions before an employee officially starts work. The main purpose of this service is to assess the physical health of new employees, ensure they possess the physical conditions required for the job, and reduce workforce loss and risks due to health problems for the company. Pre-employment medical examinations typically include routine checkups, screening for various infectious diseases, health assessments for specific positions, and targeted examinations. Through this process, companies can not only protect the health of their employees but also provide them with health management advice, promoting their physical and mental well-being

With changes in the global labor market and the increasing emphasis placed on employee health by companies, the market prospects for pre-employment medical examination services are broad. More and more companies realize that healthy employees can improve work efficiency, reduce sick leave rates, and lower medical and insurance costs. Furthermore, pre-employment medical examinations have become part of corporate social responsibility (CSR), helping companies build a positive brand image. With the popularization of health management concepts, pre-employment medical examinations are no longer limited to manual labor positions; more and more white-collar workers and high-level positions are also beginning to undergo health screenings. With the application of digital health monitoring technology and the continuous expansion of pre-employment medical examination services, the demand for this industry is expected to continue to grow in the future, especially in emerging markets such as China and India, where pre-employment medical examination services will become a standardized process in corporate management.
