Primary polyester filament refers to a type of synthetic fiber made directly from polymer pellets through the process of extrusion. It involves melting the polyester chips and then extruding them through spinnerets to form continuous filaments. These filaments are then processed further for various textile applications. Primary polyester filament offers excellent strength, durability, and colorfastness. It is widely used in the textile and apparel industry for making a variety of products such as clothing, home textiles, upholstery, and industrial fabrics. With its versatility, cost-effectiveness, and wide availability, primary polyester filament remains a popular choice in the textile market for its reliable performance and wide range of applications.

The market prospect for primary polyester filament is expected to be strong. With its excellent strength, durability, and colorfastness, primary polyester filament is widely used across various textile applications. The demand for textile products, such as clothing, home textiles, upholstery, and industrial fabrics, remains robust. The versatility and cost-effectiveness of primary polyester filament make it a preferred choice for manufacturers, contributing to its market growth. However, factors such as sustainability concerns and competition from alternative fibers may impact the market dynamics. Nonetheless, the consistent demand for reliable and high-performance synthetic fibers indicates a positive market outlook for primary polyester filament in the textile industry.
