Private prison contract services are provided by private prison corporations. Private Prison Corporations are business entities that operate correctional facilities on a for-profit basis. These are privately-owned companies that enter into contracts with governments (at various levels such as federal, state, or local) to build, manage, and operate prisons or detention centers. They are paid by the government based on different arrangements, which could include a fixed fee per inmate per day, payments for meeting certain performance metrics like maintaining security or providing inmate programs, or other contractual stipulations. Their main source of revenue comes from these government payments, and they aim to make a profit from running the correctional facilities.
