Real estate software is a category of digital tools covering the entire lifecycle of real estate development, sales, leasing, investment, and asset management. It includes multiple subsystems such as ERP (Enterprise Resource Planning), CRM (Customer Relationship Management), RSM (Sales Management System), and PMS (Property Management System). Its target audience includes developers, brokers, investors, property management companies, and end-users. The core objectives are to improve operational efficiency, optimize customer experience, and enable data-driven decision support. Property Management Software (PMS), as an important branch of real estate software, focuses on management and services during the property operation phase. Primarily targeting property management companies and asset operators, it provides functions such as rent collection, maintenance work orders, resident services, energy consumption monitoring, and public facility management, facilitating the digitalization, automation, and refined management of building operations.

With the continuous integration of smart cities, the Internet of Things, and AI technologies, real estate software and property management systems are accelerating their development towards greater intelligence, greener practices, and user-centricity. Through AI and big data technologies, the system can achieve rent forecasting, customer profiling, energy consumption optimization, and risk warning, improving the scientific basis of decision-making and operational efficiency. Digital twins and visual management, leveraging 3D modeling and real-time monitoring, help buildings achieve refined operations. Mobile services allow residents to report repairs, pay bills, and reserve facilities anytime via an app, significantly enhancing the living experience. Simultaneously, the integration of ESG principles promotes the system's integration of carbon emission monitoring, energy-saving control, and sustainable development indicators, contributing to green building management. Ultimately, through platform-based and ecosystem-based construction, the system will connect government regulation, financial services, and third-party supply chains, building a digital ecosystem for smart communities and city-level real estate operations.
