Propoxytetramethyl piperidiny dimethicone (henceforth PTMPD) is a unique, patented cationically-modified silicone described by its makers as a “hindered amino functional silicone fluid.” It belongs to the same general category as other amine-functionalized silicones, such as amodimethicone and bis-aminopropyl dimethicone. These silicones have been modified by adding pendant groups suspended from the main silicone chain that contain organo-amine groups (-R-NH₂), which become positively charged in water due to electrostatic interactions. The result is a cationic polymer (positively-charged) that possesses many exceptional beneficial properties for use in hair and skin care applications.
