Regulatory audit services refer to the review, supervision, and evaluation of the operations of enterprises, institutions, or organizations within a compliance framework by professional agencies or third-party service providers to ensure their compliance with relevant laws, regulations, and industry standards. These services typically include audits of a company's financial statements, business models, risk management, data protection, environmental policies, and labor practices to ensure compliance with government regulatory requirements and industry best practices. Regulatory audits not only help identify potential compliance risks but also improve corporate transparency, enhance the trust of external investors and consumers, and help companies avoid legal and financial consequences for regulatory violations.

With the increasing complexity of the global economy and the continuous evolution of laws and regulations, the prospects for regulatory audit services are becoming increasingly broad. Particularly in highly regulated industries such as finance, healthcare, environmental protection, and data protection, the increasing compliance pressure and legal risks faced by companies further drive the demand for regulatory audit services. Strengthening government oversight in areas such as anti-corruption, anti-money laundering, and tax compliance prompts companies to continuously improve their compliance review mechanisms. Furthermore, with the advancement of globalization and the increasing operational needs of multinational corporations, companies must not only comply with domestic regulations but also adhere to international standards, such as the EU's GDPR and the US SOX Act. Due to these complex compliance requirements, companies will increasingly rely on external professional auditing services, providing a driving force for the continued growth of the regulatory auditing industry. Therefore, the regulatory auditing services market will continue to expand, becoming a key component of corporate compliance management and risk control.
