The global Repeater Compass market size is predicted to grow from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of % from 2026 to 2032.

Repeater compass is an instrument used for navigation to display the heading information from a primary compass system in a secondary or remote location. It is typically used in multi-station setups where the primary compass is located in one area, such as the bridge of a ship or the cockpit of an aircraft, and the repeater compass is placed elsewhere for easy viewing by multiple users, such as crew members or passengers.

The repeater compass receives the heading information from the primary compass system and accurately displays it on its own compass card or display unit. It allows users in different areas of the vessel or aircraft to monitor the heading simultaneously without relying solely on the primary compass's visibility. Repeater compasses are typically installed on various parts of the ship or aircraft, such as the chartroom, crew cabins, or passenger lounges, providing convenient access to heading information for navigation and situational awareness purposes.

United States market for Repeater Compass is estimated to increase from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million by 2032, at a CAGR of % from 2026 through 2032.
