A seamed table tennis ball is a type of ball that is constructed with a visible seam, typically formed where two halves of the ball are joined together. Unlike seamless balls, which are made from a single molded piece, seamed balls are stitched or glued at the seam. These balls are commonly used for recreational play and are generally less durable than seamless balls, with the seam being a weak point that can affect their bounce and performance over time. Seamed table tennis balls are often more affordable but may not provide the same consistency and quality as higher-grade balls.
