A Semi Finished Ring refers to a wedding ring that is partially completed but still requires some additional work before it is considered a finished product. Semi-finished rings are typically produced in bulk by jewelry manufacturers and are then further customized and completed by jewelry artisans or retailers according to the customer's preferences.

The Semi Finished Ring may already have the basic structure and design in place, such as the metal band and setting, but it may lack certain elements, such as gemstones, engravings, or additional intricate details. The purpose of offering semi-finished rings is to allow customers to personalize the ring further, adding their desired gemstones, engravings, or other decorative elements. With a semi-finished wedding ring, customers have the flexibility to choose the specific gemstones, metals, and designs they prefer, making the ring more unique and tailored to their preferences. This customization process often involves working closely with a jewelry professional who can guide the customer through the options available and help bring their vision to life. It is important to note that the level of customization and the specific processes involved in completing a semi-finished wedding ring may vary depending on the jeweler or retailer. Some may offer more extensive customization options, while others may have limitations or specific guidelines to follow.
