Abstracts

The global Shotcrete Manipulator market size is predicted to grow from US$ 421 million in 2025 to US$ 577 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 4.7% from 2026 to 2032.

A Shotcrete Manipulator is a specialized piece of construction equipment that employs a multi-degree-of-freedom spraying arm—replacing manual nozzle operation—to continuously spray concrete at high velocity onto working surfaces such as tunnels, roadways, caverns, or slopes. The complete system typically integrates a self-propelled chassis, a concrete pumping unit, a telescopic spraying arm, a nozzle, a compressed air system, an accelerator dosing unit, and a remote or automatic control system; it enables the simultaneous execution of concrete conveyance, accelerator dosing, nozzle positioning, and shotcrete application.

Upstream raw materials in the industry chain primarily include carbon steel, low-alloy high-strength steel, and wear-resistant steel (used for the chassis, boom, and pumping structure); stainless steel and cast iron (for hoppers, piping, and fasteners); as well as hydraulic hoses, wear-resistant rubber, polyurethane, engineering plastics, copper, aluminum alloys, cables, sealing materials, and industrial coatings. Midstream enterprises handle the welding of frames and booms, the manufacturing of pumping structures, the integration of hydraulic and electronic control systems, the configuration of accelerator dosing systems, final assembly, and operational testing; they produce various models based on specifications such as spraying flow rate, boom coverage range, equipment dimensions, and automation capabilities. Downstream markets primarily consist of construction entities involved in railways, highways, urban rail transit, water conservancy and hydropower projects, and underground mining.
