A Site Management Organization (SMO) is a professional service organization that assists researchers and clinical trial institutions by dispatching Clinical Study Coordinators (CRCs) to perform non-medical judgment-based administrative tasks within trials. SMO services aim to improve the quality and efficiency of clinical trials, ensuring compliance with Good Clinical Practice (GCP) and study protocol requirements. Core responsibilities include supporting subject recruitment, document management, data entry, visit management, and coordination and communication with all relevant stakeholders. SMOs originated in the United States in the 1970s and rapidly developed in Europe and Japan in the 1990s. In the 21st century, with the globalization of clinical research, Chinese companies began to emulate some of the capabilities of foreign SMOs in 2008. These companies established teams of CRCs (Clinical Study Coordinators) primarily through dispatching personnel to participate in trials, and established the basic framework for Chinese SMOs in terms of pricing, management, and training.
