Socio-emotional learning (SEL) refers to the process through which individuals develop and acquire the knowledge, skills, and attitudes necessary to understand and manage their emotions, set and achieve positive goals, show empathy for others, establish and maintain positive relationships, and make responsible decisions. SEL focuses on the integration of social and emotional skills into education and personal development to promote well-being, positive behavior, and academic success.

Socio-emotional learning has gained significant traction in the education sector. Schools and educational institutions recognize the importance of nurturing students' social and emotional skills alongside academic development. Many schools have integrated SEL programs into their curricula or implemented specific initiatives to promote social-emotional well-being among students.
