The global Soft Top Surfboard market size is predicted to grow from US$ 346 million in 2025 to US$ 537 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.6% from 2026 to 2032.

Soft tops are generally cheaper than their fiberglass counterparts. Since they have a soft outer shell, they are less likely to ding or crack when hit with objects like your elbow or the sand. Soft-top surfboards are easier to learn on than fiberglass boards. Since they are often thicker, they float a lot more than fiberglass boards which makes the board more stable. Not only are soft tops great for learning, but they are usually safer than fiberglass boards. Fiberglass boards can be hard and can have sharp edges, especially fins. Soft tops usually have flexible fins along with rounded rails and a soft deck all around. In recent years, foam surfboards have made a resurgence as demand continues to grow, and there are many companies that now only make soft-top surfboards.

With the improvement of people's living standards and the increase in demand for leisure and entertainment activities, more and more people choose to surf and entertain in waters such as beaches and lakes, which has promoted the market demand for soft-top surfboards in the entertainment field. In some professional surfing competitions, soft-top surfboards are also widely used. Because of its good performance and controllability, it can meet the needs of athletes in the competition, so its market share in the field of sports competitions is also gradually increasing.

With the popularization and development of surfing and people's pursuit of a healthy and leisure lifestyle, the market demand for soft-top surfboards will continue to grow. Especially in some emerging markets and developing countries, with the development of the economy and the improvement of people's income levels, the participation in surfing will continue to increase, thus bringing new growth opportunities to the soft-top
