Software Maintenance and Support Service refers to the ongoing activities and assistance provided by software vendors or third-party service providers to ensure the smooth functioning, performance, and reliability of software applications. This service encompasses a range of activities, including bug fixes, software updates, patches, troubleshooting, and technical support, aimed at addressing issues, improving functionality, and enhancing the user experience. Software maintenance involves identifying and resolving software defects or errors that may arise during the software lifecycle, such as coding errors, compatibility issues, or security vulnerabilities. Software support, on the other hand, involves providing assistance to users in resolving technical issues, answering questions, and providing guidance on using the software effectively. Maintenance and support services are typically offered through service level agreements (SLAs) that outline the scope of services, response times, and performance metrics. These services are essential for ensuring the long-term viability and usability of software applications, minimizing downtime, and maximizing the return on investment for software users.
