The stern tube sealing system is a key component of the ship's propulsion system. It is installed between the stern shaft and the stern tube. It is mainly used to prevent seawater from penetrating into the ship and lubricating oil from leaking to the external sea area, ensuring the safety of ship navigation and protecting the marine environment. The system usually consists of multiple sealing rings, lubrication systems, support structures and monitoring devices, including front seals (to prevent oil leakage), rear seals (to prevent water from entering) and intermediate sealing chambers to maintain pressure balance. Common seal types include lip seals, mechanical seals and air seals. The materials are mostly corrosion-resistant and highly wear-resistant rubber, silicon carbide or polymer materials to adapt to high speed, high pressure and complex sea conditions.

United States market for Stern Tube Sealing Systems is estimated to increase from US$ million in 2024 to US$ million by 2031, at a CAGR of % from 2025 through 2031.

China market for Stern Tube Sealing Systems is estimated to increase from US$ million in 2024 to US$ million by 2031, at a CAGR of % from 2025 through 2031.
