Sucralfate API is a gastric mucosal protectant, chemically known as aluminum sucrose sulfate. As a white or off-white powder, it is nearly insoluble in water. In gastric acid, it dissociates into negatively charged sucrose sulfate complex ions, binding to ulcer surface proteins to form a protective film that prevents erosion by gastric acid and pepsin, used for treating gastric ulcers and gastritis.

The global Sucralfate API market is undergoing steady expansion, driven by the increasing prevalence of gastrointestinal disorders and global demographic aging. The rising prevalence of gastrointestinal (GI) disorders, specifically peptic ulcers, gastroesophageal reflux disease (GERD), and stress-related mucosal injuries, serves as a primary demand catalyst. Official health statistics indicate that dietary shifts, lifestyle-induced stress, and the continued prevalence of Helicobacter pylori infections maintain a steady requirement for effective mucosal protectors. As diagnostic capabilities expand in emerging economies, the identified patient pool requiring therapeutic intervention continues to grow globally.
