Suede leather is a type of leather that has undergone a specific manufacturing process to give it a soft, napped surface. It is made from the underside of the animal hide, typically from sheep, goat, or calf, where the fibers are finer and more tightly packed. The distinguishing characteristic of suede is its velvety texture, which is achieved by sanding or buffing the surface of the leather. This process raises the short, fuzzy nap of the fibers, resulting in a smooth yet slightly fuzzy finish. Suede leather is known for its suppleness, flexibility, and luxurious feel. Suede leather is commonly used in clothing, such as jackets, skirts, pants, and shoes. It is favored for its aesthetic appeal, as well as its comfort and versatility. However, it should be noted that suede is more delicate and prone to damage and staining compared to other types of leather, so proper care is required to maintain its quality and appearance.
