Abstracts

The global Supply Chain Finance Service market size is predicted to grow from US$ 8931 million in 2025 to US$ 13250 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.9% from 2026 to 2032.

Supply Chain Finance Service is an integrated financial solution anchored in real trade transactions and leveraged on the creditworthiness of core enterprises, defined by its core function of optimizing cash flow and capital allocation efficiency across the supply chain through instruments such as accounts receivable financing, inventory financing, and advance payment financing. The upstream fund providers include commercial banks, factoring companies, and capital market institutions, responsible for supplying low-cost capital and risk control support. The midstream is led by fintech platforms, core enterprises' financial arms, and third-party service providers, handling credit assessment, transaction verification, fund matching, and process management. Downstream clients encompass SMEs within the core enterprise's supply chain (suppliers and distributors), addressing their financing challenges caused by payment term mismatches. The effectiveness of supply chain finance hinges on the credit strength of core enterprises, trade data transparency, and end-to-end digitalization, with its evolution shaped by the maturity of industrial internet infrastructure, financial institutions' risk pricing capabilities, and macroeconomic cycles.

The supply chain finance industry is evolving from a traditional model reliant on the corporate credit of core enterprises towards a digital ecosystem model underpinned by transaction data credibility. Future development will increasingly focus on leveraging AI and blockchain technologies to achieve multi-tier transparency of assets and dynamic, precise risk pricing, thereby enhancing capital penetration and operational resilience across the entire chain. Industry competition is shifting from a singular focus on capital
