The global Suture Tape market size is predicted to grow from US$ 186 million in 2025 to US$ 292 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.9% from 2026 to 2032.

In 2025, global suture tape output reached approximately 6.8 million rolls, with an average selling price of around USD 28 per roll. Total production capacity was about 8.4 million rolls, and the overall gross margin was approximately 70%.

Suture tape is a high-strength flat surgical suturing material, typically made from fibers such as ultra-high molecular weight polyethylene or polyester, designed in a tape or braided form to provide a larger load-distribution area during soft tissue, tendon, and ligament repair, thereby reducing tissue cut-through and improving fixation stability.

The global suture tape market is mainly concentrated in orthopedics and sports medicine, with well-established use in arthroscopic procedures such as rotator cuff repair and ligament reconstruction. Compared with conventional sutures, suture tape commands higher unit prices and margins. The market is dominated by a small number of international medical device companies, with competition focused on material strength, clinical validation, and surgeon preference. In emerging regions such as Asia-Pacific and Latin America, demand continues to grow alongside increasing adoption of minimally invasive surgery.
