A table tennis machine, also known as a table tennis robot or ping pong robot, is a device designed to simulate the play of a human opponent in table tennis. It is used for training purposes, allowing players to practice and improve their skills without the need for a human partner. Table tennis machines are commonly used by players of varying skill levels, including beginners and advanced players.

Ongoing developments in ball projection technology may focus on creating more realistic and adjustable simulations of ball speed, spin, and trajectory. This could involve innovations in the mechanics and engineering of the machines to replicate the complexities of human play.
