Teen facial cleansers are facial cleansing products specifically designed for teenagers. Their core features are gentle cleansing, protection of the skin barrier, and oil control and acne treatment. They are tailored to the skin characteristics of teenagers, including increased sebum production, thinner stratum corneum, and incompletely developed skin barrier function due to hormonal fluctuations, preventing sensitivity and water-oil imbalance caused by over-cleansing.

The upstream core ingredients of teenager facial cleansers include surfactants (amino acid surfactants, APG, betaine), moisturizers (glycerin, panthenol, ceramides, hyaluronic acid), functional additives (salicylic acid, azelaic acid, zinc PCA, plant extracts), preservatives, and fragrances. The midstream core focuses on gentle formulas (amino acid/APG blends to reduce irritation risk), precise efficacy (addressing the three major pain points of teenagers: oiliness, acne, and sensitivity), and optimized skin feel (refreshing and non-drying, suitable for the characteristics of teenage skin). The downstream connects production and consumption, determining product reach efficiency and presenting a diversified channel structure with online as the primary method and offline as a supplement.

In 2025, global sales of facial cleansers for teenagers will reach 111 million units, with a production capacity of approximately 140 million units, an average selling price of US$12.67 per unit, and an average gross profit margin of 55%-65%.
