Tert-Butylphenyl Diphenyl Phosphate is a tert-butylation triaryl phosphate flame-retardant plasticizer, commonly abbreviated as BPDP, with CAS No. 56803-37-3. The product is typically a colorless to light-yellow transparent liquid and features phosphorus-based flame retardancy, plasticizing performance, low volatility, and compatibility with low-halogen or halogen-free formulations. It is mainly used in PVC, engineering plastics, coatings, adhesives, sealants, wires and cables, and other material systems, helping improve flame-retardant performance, processing fluidity, and formulation compatibility.

The upstream of the Tert-Butylphenyl Diphenyl Phosphate value chain mainly includes phenol, tert-butylphenol, phosphorus oxychloride, catalysts, solvents, and refining auxiliaries. The midstream consists of organophosphorus flame retardant manufacturers that produce products with different phosphorus content, viscosity, color, and volatility grades through esterification, alkylation, refining, deacidification, filtration, and quality control. The downstream applications mainly cover construction, transportation, electronic and electrical, consumer products, industrial products, and other fields.
