The growing demand for lightweight composite materials is a prominent market trend, and with increasing environmental concerns, lightweight composite materials are required in many industries to reduce their carbon footprint. Additionally, the increase in smart infrastructure construction is driving the application of this material to control overheating and maintain room temperature within buildings. Consequently, several government agencies across the world are increasing their investments in sustainable development of energy-efficient buildings, thereby increasing the demand for the product. Additionally, many renovation and remodeling projects are replacing traditional building materials with fiberglass for improved structural stability and better insulation. Apart from this, the significant growth of the renewable energy industry has increased the demand for the manufacture of various electrical equipment using safe and clean energy sources such as tidal power and wind power. Furthermore, the growing automotive industry and rising demand for energy-efficient vehicles is increasing the use of this product in panel assemblies, body panels, cab components, front fascias, and battery boxes. It is also replacing metals in pipelines, storage tanks and subsea systems in the water treatment and oil and gas sectors. These factors will continue to drive the growth of the global fiberglass market in the coming years. For transportation applications, these materials are ideal as they are lightweight, strong and rigid, provide excellent protection from external elements, can be molded into any size and form, and have an outstanding appearance. It is used in the automotive and wind energy industries due to its low weight, high strength-to-weight ratio and excellent service life. The marine and automotive industries are major users of fiberglass due to the need for impact-resistant and lightweight materials. Strict regulations are imposed on the automotive industry in order to reduce CO2 emissions. It encourages the industry to introduce energy-efficient light-duty vehicles to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. This composite material is widely used in the automotive industry as a substitute for aluminum and steel to produce lightweight vehicles. This is expected to drive the market progress during the forecast period.
