Third-party inspection, calibration, and testing services refer to technical services provided by professional institutions that are independent of both suppliers and buyers and possess legal qualifications. These institutions use professional equipment and technical methods to objectively evaluate, verify, and issue authoritative reports on product quality, safety, performance, compliance, as well as the measurement accuracy of instruments and equipment, based on international/national standards, technical specifications, or contractual agreements. Its core value lies in providing impartial, scientific, and reliable 'data judgment,' which is a key technical foundation for ensuring quality, building market trust, and supporting regulation and trade.

With the deepening of global trade, increasingly stringent quality and safety regulations in various countries, and the drive for industrial upgrading, the prospects for the third-party testing industry continue to be positive. Its demand is shifting from traditional compliance verification to extending across the entire chain, including supply chain quality management, R&D testing, product certification, and lifecycle assessment. With technological progress, service models will become more intelligent, digital, and platform-based, while market concentration and specialization will further increase, making it an indispensable production service industry supporting high-quality development.
