The global Thymic Peptide Immunomodulator Injections market size is predicted to grow from US$ 509 million in 2025 to US$ 748 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 5.5% from 2026 to 2032.

Thymic Peptide Immunomodulator Injections refer to prescription injectable drugs based on thymus-derived or thymus-related immunomodulatory peptides, used mainly to regulate cellular immunity and support immune function in clinical settings. The category includes animal-thymus-extract peptide mixtures such as thymopolypeptides for injection, synthetic or defined thymic peptides such as thymopentin for injection, and thymosin alpha 1 / thymalfasin injections. These products are generally used in hospital settings as adjunctive immunomodulatory therapies for immune deficiency, infection-related immune dysfunction, chronic viral disease support, tumor supportive treatment and immune function recovery. In this report, the market mainly includes thymopolypeptides for injection, thymopentin for injection, thymalfasin for injection, thymosin alpha 1 injection and related thymic peptide injectable preparations. The 2025 benchmark ASP is US$9.50 / vial, shipment volume is 54.74 million vials, and average gross margin is 50%. The upstream industry chain includes animal thymus raw materials, peptide synthesis materials, protected amino acids, peptide coupling reagents, purification media, chromatography systems, sterile water for injection, excipients, stabilizers, glass vials, rubber stoppers, aluminum caps and cold-chain packaging materials. The midstream includes extraction, peptide synthesis, purification, concentration, sterile filtration, formulation, filling, lyophilization, sealing, visual inspection, potency testing, sterility testing, endotoxin testing, stability testing, batch release and pharmacovigilance. The downstream includes hospitals, oncology departments, infectious disease departments, immunology departments, respiratory departments, pharmaceutical distributors, centralized procurement platforms and hospital pharmacies.

Thymic peptide immunomodulator injections show a mixed but more balanced market outlook than thymopolypeptides alone. Older thymopolypeptide extract injections face pressure from rational drug-use policies, adverse-reaction warnings, mature generic competition and hospital auxiliary-drug management. However, the broader category also includes synthetic and more defined peptide products such as thymalfasin and thymopentin, which support a more stable market structure. Demand is mainly driven by oncology supportive care, infection-related immune dysfunction, chronic viral disease management, postoperative immune support, respiratory disease supportive treatment and clinical interest in immune regulation. The market is expected to grow moderately because total clinical demand for immune-supportive injectable peptides remains, but growth will be restrained by stricter evidence requirements, safety monitoring, centralized procurement pressure and competition from newer immunotherapies. Future competition will shift from broad “immune boosting” positioning toward clearer indications, better quality consistency, defined peptide composition, safer use, pharmacovigilance, hospital access, synthetic peptide manufacturing capability and differentiated immunomodulatory portfolios.
