The global Value Added Logistics Service market size is predicted to grow from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of %from 2026 to 2032.

Value added logistics service refers to a logistics management model that enhances customer value by providing additional services on the basis of traditional logistics services. These value-added services can include goods packaging, labeling, quality inspection, customized distribution, information feedback, etc., with the purpose of improving logistics efficiency, reducing costs, and enhancing customer experience. As market competition intensifies, companies are paying more and more attention to value-added logistics services in supply chain management to meet the growing needs of customers. In the modern business environment, value-added logistics services are not just a simple combination of transportation and warehousing, but also cover a variety of customized solutions, allowing companies to flexibly respond to market changes and improve service levels. In the context of globalization, the significance of value-added logistics services has become increasingly prominent. As international trade grows, companies need to cope with more complex logistics networks and diverse customer needs. Value-added logistics services can not only help companies reduce operational risks, but also enhance brand image and market competitiveness. Therefore, more and more companies are beginning to invest in value-added logistics services to achieve more efficient supply chain management and better customer service. This transformation not only improves the service level of the logistics industry, but also promotes the optimization and development of the overall business environment.

United States market for Value Added Logistics Service is estimated to increase from US$ million in 2025 to US$ million by 2032, at a CAGR of % from 2026 through 2032.
