Abstracts

The global Veterinary Hospital market size is predicted to grow from US$ 90530 million in 2025 to US$ 135250 million in 2032; it is expected to grow at a CAGR of 6.0% from 2026 to 2032.

Some commonly sold medicines in veterinary hospitals are vaccines, parasiticides, flea or tick control medicines, worm care products, NSAIDs, analgesics, dental care products, and wound care products. Growing demand for animal products, such as meat, egg, and milk, is encouraging farmers to adopt necessary vaccinations for their animals to gain a healthy production rate and higher profitability. Moreover, growing awareness about zoonotic diseases and the interconnectedness between animal health & human health has resulted in greater attention to necessary veterinary medicines in hospitals. The surgical procedures performed in veterinary hospitals are categorized majorly into two sectors: urgent and elective procedures. Some of the common elective surgeries performed for companion animals are spaying & neutering, benign skin growths, and dental extractions. The commonly admitted urgent care surgeries include skin abscesses, internal bleeding, tumor removal, fracture repair, intestinal obstruction, and torn cruciate, among others.

The market is primarily driven by the increasing consolidation of animal hospitals, the rising companion animal population coupled with enhanced pet adoption rates, growing awareness about animal healthcare, and the rising adoption of pet insurance. For instance, in December 2022, Trupanion, a pet insurance company, reported a rise in pet insurance enrollments to 1.53 million, registering 31% growth from the previous year. The growing number of pet owners is subsequently increasing awareness about animal care. In developed countries such as the U.S., numerous pet health awareness programs such as National Pet Week are often organized. Increasing awareness about veterinary healthcare, coupled with the implementation of stringent regulations to prevent animal diseases, is likely to drive market growth.
