Whey and milk permeate powders are by-products obtained from membrane filtration processes such as ultrafiltration or nanofiltration, where proteins are separated from whey or milk. The permeate, rich in lactose and minerals but low in protein, is concentrated and spray-dried into powder form. Whey permeate is typically derived from cheese whey, while milk permeate originates from whole or skim milk processing. These powders are widely used in bakery, beverages, dairy formulations, animal feed, and fermentation industries, offering nutritional benefits, functional properties, and cost efficiency in various food and feed applications.

In 2024, global whey and milk permeate powder production reached 1.1603 million tons, with an average selling price of US$544 per ton. Typical single-line production capacity is approximately 50,000-100,000 tons, and the industry's gross profit margin is approximately 10%-20%. Cost structure: Direct materials account for approximately 35%, manufacturing costs account for approximately 40%, and labor costs account for approximately 8%. Industry chain: Upstream consists of milk source supply and primary processing; downstream industries include food and beverage, animal feed, etc.
