A wired mouse is a computer peripheral that is connected to a computer via a cable. It is used for navigating and controlling the cursor on the screen. The wired mouse typically has two buttons and a scroll wheel for clicking and scrolling functions. It is a traditional input device for personal computers and is often preferred for its reliability and lower latency compared to wireless mice.

The industry trend of wired mice is gradually shifting towards wireless alternatives as technology improves and consumers demand more flexibility and mobility in their computing setups. However, wired mice continue to be popular among gamers and professionals who prioritize precision and instantaneous response times in their work or gaming.
