A wooden sash is a window frame made of wood. Although aluminum, stainless steel, and plastic sashes are prevalent, wooden sashes, with their traditional appeal, are gaining renewed attention. Modern wooden sashes offer improved construction, and better thermal insulation, and can accommodate larger glass areas without the rattling issues common in older designs.

Wooden sashes are primarily used for window frames. Today, their use extends beyond traditional frames to include large living room windows facing gardens, effectively becoming part of the wall. Their improved fire resistance is driving demand, with applications in various types of doors and skylights, enhancing their versatility as a building material.

Despite their wooden construction, most modern wooden sashes meet fire safety standards. Improvements in glass technology have also made it possible to use non-screened glass while maintaining fire resistance. By pairing wooden sashes with fire-rated glass, their advantages, including large openings, can be fully utilized.
