Abstracts

Curcumin (diferuloylmethane) is one of the potent, nontoxic and major bioactive compound obtained from rhizome of Curcuma Longa.

Most commercially available preparations of curcumin have very poor bioavailability, impairing their ability to confer life-sustaining properties. Thus, continuous research on curcumin found some possible ways to overcome these. Various strategies that are used for Curcumin Bioavailability enhancement are as follows:

Nanocrystal

Emulsion

Report contains the study of US Buyers of Biocurcumin. All importer buyers and Domestic Buyers are covered in this report with all contact details and their buying capacity. Note: Complete list of consumers would be provided in a separate MS-Excel file along with the report.
